

The application of the thermal balance method to the computing of warming up in electric machines

Abstract

The report describes the procedure of the thermal balance method's implementation to the computing of transformer shielding warming up. The task is described by the elliptic partial differential equation of second order with Newton boundary condition on a rectangle region. In the article, the outputs of solution for the particular transformer type are provided.